Unemployed engineering construction workers demand the right to work

unite the UNION

At Staythorpe power station, Alstom has sub-contracted two overseas companies to carry out construction work on the site. Unite believes that the two overseas companies have refused to accept applications for work from UK workers, intending instead to use more than 600 overseas workers on the project.

With hundreds of workers from the engineering construction industry now unemployed, this cannot be right.

All UK workers are asking for is the right to be considered for work on this construction project.

Unite the Union is calling on the Government to ensure that all engineering construction employers recruit local labour, especially those out of work, onto all work in major construction projects.

Please add your support by signing the below petition and asking your friends and family to do the same. Thank you
