For all our futures

80 part time youth workers in Coventry have been involved in an industrial dispute including strike action since November 2009. They are fighting to keep their professional contracts and terms and conditions and stop cuts and privatisation of young people's services. The attack on them was started by a Tory Council and a private consultancy that got paid well for proposing cuts of up to £10,000 a year for part time workers and over £120,000 in essential services to young people. Councils throughout the country are doing the same. They must be stopped.

This is the longest dispute in youth work's history.

It is one dispute, but symbolises a lot.

We have seen the effects on our communities of manufacturing decline and unemployment.

We have felt the bad effects of privatisation and worse terms and conditions. What if we now accept big cuts to our public services?

This is the thin end of a very big wedge in Coventry and elsewhere.

What future will there be for our young people if we have no manufacturing, no public services and no welfare and education support for people?

Coventry and the Midlands were proud manufacturing centres of excellence and full employment. Our young people were valued and we built youth services with them. What if this is all pulled apart?

Join our rally and say yes to an alternative future.
