network

Unite is your union, as a woman member you have the opportunity to change your work place for the better. Lorene Fabian who is active in the union's women's network said. "it can be an incredibly empowering and rewarding experience to be involved in UNITE, by becoming active in the union at work I can ensure my employer takes the issues of bullying and harassment, flexible working and career prospects for women seriously, ensure we get paid a fair rate for the job and have access to training opportunities to gain promotion. Through UNITE I've also been able to campaign on globalisation, domestic violence and maternity rights as part of our women's campaigns."

Unite's campaigns for women at work gain strength through having as many members involved as possible. That is why our women's Network is so important.

By signing up to the network you will:

- Ensure your voice is heard and become involved in our women's campaigning.
- Receive our e-equality newsletter.
- Be able to network with other women members who are interested in similar issues.
- Receive information about Unite's campaigns, education, training and events

Unite organises local meetings for women members and there are elected national women's conferences and a national committee that provide us a powerful voice and ensure our views are heard when it comes to making a difference at work.

Unite campaigns for equal rights at work

Unite is campaigning for a Single Equality Act that will ensure we have decent protection against discrimination at work and a positive duty on employers to show they are taking equality seriously.

Unite is campaigning for equal pay at work through pay audits, to tackle the pay discrimination, job segregation and glass ceiling that women face, to give us fair pay, access to promotion and training opportunities.

Unite is campaigning for properly funded occupational pension schemes for all with employer contributions as well as our own contributions – investing for our future and tackling the poverty in retirement faced by many women today.

Unite is campaigning for global trade justice, and an end to child labour and the race to the bottom in wages by global corporations.

Unite is campaigning for decent services for women facing domestic violence.

By becoming a Unite workplace representative you can make a difference. Negotiating change at work; representing people who suffer discrimination; campaigning; recruiting and organising more members by building our strength in the work place.

By working together we can achieve recognition for the union at work which means our employers have to talk to the union as a collective rather than picking off individual workers.

Unite is the largest international union in the world with over 2 million members in every kind of workplace from factories and offices to hospitals and universities.

Unite is the union for you whether you work in the public, private or voluntary sector with membership extending to banks, insurance companies, local authorities, education, health, manufacturing and charities.

Our strength comes from our size which means:

- We have and continue to negotiate better terms and conditions in your workplace.
- You will get advice and representation if you have a problem at work.
- We have a powerful political voice and are affiliated to the Labour Party.
- We campaign in the UK and internationally for greater equality and the strengthening of workers' rights.
