Unite – the union for people like you

People like you who work in the Community and Non profit sector are better off in Unite. Research shows that staff in organisations where a union is established are paid more, they feel more secure, they have fewer accidents, they have better job security, parental and family leave, enjoy more equality and have more say than organisations where their employer has no recognised union. You have a legal right to join and be represented, so why wait?

Unite has members in a wide variety of organisation in the sector. Organisations dealing with arts and culture, training, animals, children, environment, advice, faith organisations, the family, housing, health, overseas aid, professional standards, policy work, qualifications and accreditation, research, support for volunteering, women, young people and many, many more.

You have a legal right to be represented in problems at work. Unite is showing the way with Community branches where you can meet other workers from organisations like your own. Unite is improving the ways employers deal with their people, by working in partnership with them wherever possible.

Whether you change jobs or stay put, Unite will continue to be relevant. Our high quality education and training will help in your personal development besides making sense of work issues and ensuring that you meet your employer on a level playing field. Whether your concerns are with job security, pensions, funding, development, health & safety or any of a number of other issues, Unite can help with good practice and fair treatment.
